

EARN FREQUENT FLYER MILES LIKE MY CAT

Despite sleeping 20 hours a day, my cat Mojo has managed to get a ridiculous amount of FF miles. He can fly First Class anywhere in the world and hang out in the finest cafes in Tokyo, where he has many fans.

While the masses are sweating it out in airport waiting areas, he's relaxing in luxury in an airline lounge. While they're cramped in Economy seats, he's living it up in First Class. —Drinking warm milk and watching “Ratatouille,” while stretching out in a lay flat bed with warm fuzzy blankets to snuggle in.

How does he do it?

Well, let's talk shopping. Mojo hates shopping —especially at the mall. The tile floors are cold, the muzak is atrocious, and there's waaay too many people. Who wants to get sprayed with nasty perfume while making their way to the pet shop for a snack? Screw that. My cat has better things to do with his four hours of awake-time a day. That's why he makes all his purchases online.

Airline and Hotel e-shopping malls are where he orders his fancy hairball-reducing cat food, balls of twine, nail sharpeners, clothes, computers, televisions, vitamins, squeaky toys and whatever other weird cat stuff he chooses.

The e-malls have all the same stuff he'd buy through a regular site, but when he uses the online shopping portals, he just enters his FF's and he gets double, triple, quadruple, sometimes even more (10+), points for everything he buys.

For instance, he's planning to learn Spanish soon and oh, lucky day... Rosetta Stone (through the American Airlines e-shopping mall) is offering a special deal of 14 miles per dollar spent (normally it's 7 miles per dollar spent). A complete language set is $500, so at 14 miles per dollar spent, he'll be earning 7000 miles in one easy purchase. Snap! He was gonna order those CD's online anyway.

When X-mas rolls around, he'll be online shopping at the Sharper Image for stocking stuffers because they're currently offering 6 miles per dollar spent. If I didn't already mention it, these shopping portals are FREE and can rack you up some great Airline miles and/or Hotel points.

My cat's got over half a million airline miles stowed away and a huge hunk of hotel points to boot and he practically earned them all in his sleep.

You can do the same by using the links to the e-shopping portals. Just make sure to enter your FF# when you shop. Don't have one? No problem. You can sign up for one of the major FF programs \(for free\) and get your very own FF# in minutes. And that stuff is only the beginning.

Listen, I know you're busy. So is my cat... what with all the sleeping, chasing pieces of twine, licking his tail, and what have you. Maybe you're not into shopping and you just want the most bang for your buck. The single best way to rack up tons of miles is to sign up for my newsletter.

After getting his first Rock Your Travel newsletter, Mojo decided to get some bitchin travel credit cards. He has awesome credit and thanks to the info I emailed him, he knew exactly which cards would be best for him. Each one gave him a sweet sign up bonus anywhere from 30,000 miles – 75,000 miles. Just one of those cards alone would earn him enough miles for a free round-trip flight... or three!
